Two sets of maps too complicated By Joann Lewis After I ordered the Benchmark Utah Atlas I ordered Arizona and it requires flipping back and forth between the Landscape and Public Lands Atlases to get an overall picture. I have had to purchase Colored Markers and am doing like fourth grade adding the colored areas to the Landscape maps. These maps are smaller scale than the Utah Atlas and everything is smaller including the printing which I need a magnifier to read unlike Utah. All in all this atlas has been a big disappointment. they needed to enlarge the map perhaps to cover two pages and added the small amount of additional information from the Public Lands Atlas. It also shows Indian Reservation land which is by no means public, there is very little additional information on this second set of maps and it would be extremely useful if it was added to the Landscape series and they were made larger so they can be used while on the road without the need to keep a magnifier in the glove box. The longer you use them the more you appreciate all the built in features that make them easy to use. Even the back cover serves as a quick index to the map you want in context of the whole state. 4 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Good atlas - two sections unnecessary By Karl S. Fredrickson This is a good atlas that will probably suffice for most people's purposes, including backcountry exploration and hiking. The "Public Lands" section is very useful, showing boundaries of BLM, state, national forest, national park and tribal lands, as well as the boundaries of wilderness areas. It also has a section of Sonora that will be useful if you plan on driving into Mexico towards Puerto Penasco (Rocky Point). My main complaint - I agree with the other reviewers that the scale is too small. The only difference between the "Landscape" and "Public Lands" sections is that the Landscape section is colored by elevation and the Public Lands section is colored by land ownership. Literally everything else on the map, including contour lines, is identical, so the Landscape section is basically just the Public Lands section with information thrown away. They should have just gotten rid of the Landscape section and doubled the scale! Hopefully Benchmark will address this in a future edition.
